OUT OF IT.

BY BARRY PAINE.

When Mr. James Ashton Tarraway was asked by the vicar to organize a dramatic entertainment in aid of the fund, he smiled and accepted with alacrity. He had always taken an intelligent interest in the drama. He thought at times how different his life would have been if he had taken to the stage professionally. And it would have been very different. As a solicitor he was prosperous. As an amateur actor he had never had scope. His prophetic eye saw his photograph enlarged and colored in the windows of the local photographer—Mr. Tarraway in the part of Orlando or, say, Hamlet. For Mr. Tarraway was so pleased that he found difficulty in hiding it from his intimate friends.

But if the finances of your cricket club, or your nursing home, or your pipples' institute are not what they might be; or if your hospital wants a new wing, or your fire brigade a new engine—whatever the need may be which suggests a dramatic entertainment, do not ask Mr. James Tarraway to organize it. He would certainly refuse, and he might possibly say some disagreeable and sarcastic things on the subject of amateur theatricals.

But at his first essay, flushed with enthusiasm and fired with hope, he went at once to invoke the aid of the Parkinsons. In all local matters the Parkinsons were to the fore. They were a numerous family, and possessed of numerous activities. When he told them that he had reluctantly consented to organize a dramatic entertainment, they exclaimed with one heart and voice that he was just the man for it. Would they help? Of course they would. Further, they would get the Maxwell Smiths to help, too, and the Maxwell Smiths were splendid, especially George.

Between the Parkinsons and the equally numerous Maxwell Smiths there was an alliance and friendship of long standing, and it was possible that one or two of the younger members, especially George, might further cement it in the blessed bonds of matrimony. In the meantime, at all public meetings Papa proposed votes of thanks to the head of the Maxwell Smiths, and Mr. Maxwell Smith asked oratorically where they would have been without Mr. Parkinson. So here Mr. Tarraway had his company made to his hand. So he went home happy and dreamed of a play-bill when on was written:

"Romeo (son to Montague)

Mr. J. Ashton Tarraway."

And a little further down

"Juliet (daughter of Capulet)

Miss Agnes Parkinson."

Agnes was certainly the prettiest of the Parkinson girls. The Maxwell Smiths were all good looking, especially George.

But at the very first meeting of the alliance and Mr. Tarraway he saw his hopes dashed. They listened with respect to his statement that he was disposed to fly somewhat high. But they were opposed to Shakespeare. George thought the fairest thing would be to put it to a vote. For Shakespeare voted Mr. Tarraway from conviction, and Miss Parkinson from tact. In favor of a good old farce, and something sentimental to follow, voted everybody else.

And that was the beginning of the end. Against the family alliance Mr. Tarraway was powerless. They flattered him hugely, and the more they flattered him the less did they do of the things that he wanted. When it came to the selection of a piece, it turned out that George had already looked up two things that he thought would do, though he wished it clearly to be understood that he did not want to force them on anybody. The first was that old-fashioned, rollicking piece, "Wooden Heads," full of fun and always a success. The second was that sweetly, pretty little thing in one act, entitled, "An April Love Story."

"Now," said George, "on one thing I insist. Mr. Tarraway is organizing this entertainment, and Mr. Tarraway must have the right to vote. We all value his judgment, and it must overrule any opinion which we may form ourselves."

This was agreed upon at once, without a single dissentient vote, and Mr. Tarraway was pleased. Then the two plays were read.

Mr. Tarraway did not like either of them. They were not his idea of the legitimate drama. Neither did they contain a good Tarraway part, as he had conceived it. But he was made to understand that if he did upset everybody by going against the majority and voting those pieces he would be a poltroon, an ignoramus, and a heartless cad. He did not exercise that veto.

"Of course," said George, "I don't dream of asking Mr. Tarraway to take any part in the farce. That is quite beneath his attention. It is all very well for us beginners, but I shouldn't like to see a man like Mr. Tarraway waste himself on it."

"I don't mind a little harmless fun," said Tarraway, feebly.

"No," said Miss Agnes Parkinson, "there must be a limit to your kindness."

As to the sentimental piece, there was a unanimous cry that George must play the hero. "Ten and nansome," he would look the part to perfection. Miss Agnes Parkinson said:

"Unless Mr. Tarraway wishes to play it himself. We must not forget that he is organizing this entertainment."

Mr. Tarraway disclaimed any desire to play the part, wherein he lied. George accepted it on condition that Mr. Tarraway played the man-servant, which in George's opinion was a much more important part than you would think from hearing the piece read. He had seen a great success made with it.

After the second rehearsal they all—especially George—said that though Mr. Tarraway did the part to perfection, it interfered with his duties as stage manager. They could not afford to lose him as stage manager. At the next rehearsal he was asked to give up the stage management, though for the life of them they did not know where to find another as good. The fact was that his clear enunciation and his splendid judgment marked him out as the ideal prompter. He resigned that post later, when it was found that Mrs. Winslow, who had taken five pounds' worth of tickets, wanted it for her son. As George said, with fine public spirit: "It is not as if we were doing this to amuse ourselves. We must think of the Choir Fund. Besides, Mr. Tarraway has all the organizing to do, and he will be wanted in front."

Finally Mr. Tarraway was selected as the right person to take the money at the doors. In this capacity he did not take much money, but he had the compensation of missing the entertainment.

The net result was a debt of £6 2s. 1d. And the vicar thinks that Mr. Tarraway might have put a little more money into it. The families agree with him—especially George.

Theatrical Surgery.

One night when one of Byron's big melodramas was being produced for the first time the playwright sat out in front among the critics.

The first and second acts had been given, receiving such applause from the audience that the word "success" was stamped on the play from the start.

The orchestra had finished the entr'acte number, and two other selections besides, still the signal for the rise of the curtain on act 3 had not been given. People began to wonder at the long wait, and Byron was about to leave his friends and go back to ascertain the cause when the buzzing sound of a saw was heard from the other side of the footlights.

"What's that?" asked one of the party, addressing the anxious author.

"I'm sure I don't know—unless they are cutting out the third act," was Byron's quick rejoinder.—The New York Clipper.

Why He Kicked

Milkman—Say, do you know where the family that used to live here have moved to?

Policeman—No. What do you want to know for?

Milkman—Because they have gone away without paying me $11 that they owed for milk.

Policeman—Well, I suppose there was about $6 worth of water in that bill, anyway.

Milkman—No, there wasn't; that's what makes me so blamed mad. They were new customers, and I hadn't begun to water the milk.—Boston Herald.

SPECIAL CLUB OFFER.

For a Trial Subscription of the Topeka Daily Herald.

The Topeka Daily Herald, Topeka's new evening paper, under the editorial management of Gen. J. K. Hudson, is thoroughly Kansan in tone, and up-to-date in every particular. It contains all the local, state and telegraphic news of the day, and while strictly Republican in principle, will comment upon the politics of Kansas in a thoroughly independent way.

In order that readers of the AGITATOR may have an opportunity to give the Herald a trial, we will offer a three month's subscription to the Herald in connection with the AGITATOR for $1.65. Address all subscriptions to AGITATOR, Garnett, Kas.

The Commoner.

(Mr. Bryan's Paper)

The Commoner has attained, within six months from date of the first issue, a circulation of 100,000 copies, a record probably never equaled in the history of American periodical literature. The unparalleled growth of this paper demonstrates that there is room in the newspaper field for a national paper devoted to the discussion of political, economic and social problems. To the columns of the Commoner Mr. Bryan contributes his best efforts, and his review of political events as they arise from time to time can not fail to interest those who study public questions.

The Commoner's regular subscription price is $1.00 a year. We have arranged with Mr. Bryan whereby we can furnish his paper and the AGITATOR together for one year for $1.65. The regular subscription price of the two papers when subscribed for separately is $2.00.

A Country Without Strikes.

Here is a little book that only costs 10 cents, that every American farmer and laboring man should read. It is "New Zealand in a Nut Shell," and tells all about the Court of Conciliation and arbitration, Government Insurance, etc., of that wonderful little country, and how the farmers and wage-earners, by throwing off party prejudice and casting an intelligent ballot, have become the ruling factor in the politics of the nation. What our Republican and Democratic friends here denounce as "impractical," "visionary," "revolutionary" and the "vapors of cranks and malcontents" have proven eminently practical in New Zealand and have entitled it to the distinction of being the one and only "Country Without Strikes." Send 10 cents at once to the Appeal to Reason, Girard, Kan., and get a copy.

THE NEW YORK WORLD.

THIRICE-A-WEEK EDITION.

The Most Widely Read Newspaper in America.

Time has demonstrated that the Thrice-A-Week World stands alone in its class. Other papers have imitated its form but not its success. This is because it tells all the news all the time and tells it impartially, whether that news be political or otherwise. It is, in fact, almost a daily at the price of a weekly and you cannot afford to be without it.

Republican and Democrat alike can read the Thrice-A-Week World with absolute confidence in its truth.

In addition to news, it publishes first-class serial stories and other features suited to the home and fireside.

The Thrice-A-Week World's regular subscription price is only $1.00 per year and this pays for 156 papers. We offer this unequalled newspaper and the Agitator together one year for $1.65.

The regular subscription price of the two papers is $2.00.
